Tiffany Munoz
Chief Financial Officer
Price-Henson

Dear Ms. Munoz:

This letter sets out the terms on which this firm will act for Price-Henson in the licensing diligence we discussed last month. It is the whole of our agreement on those terms. Please read it before you sign it. If any part of it differs from what you understood, say so now rather than later; a signed letter is what a court would read, and I would rather correct a sentence today than explain it under oath.

Scope of the Engagement

The engagement covers diligence on the patent families identified in the proposed in-license, and nothing outside them. Within that scope we will do the following.

- Confirm the chain of title for each family in the proposed grant, from each named inventor's assignment through every recorded transfer, and identify any gap that would leave the licensor unable to grant what it has offered to grant.
- Obtain and read the file wrapper for each issued patent and each pending application in the set, and record the prosecution history that constrains claim scope.
- Identify encumbrances of record: prior grants, fields of use already carved out, security interests, rights arising from federal funding, and any standards or consortium commitment we find.
- Map the independent claims against the product descriptions Price-Henson supplies to us, and tell you where the claims reach the planned product and where they do not.
- Record the annuity and maintenance status of every family, with the next statutory window for each, so that you know what you are taking on and when it must be paid.
- Deliver a written diligence report, marked privileged and confidential, stating our findings and the assumption on which each rests.

The engagement does not include a freedom-to-operate opinion, an opinion on validity or enforceability beyond what the report states on its face, representation in any dispute arising from the portfolio, negotiation of the commercial terms of the license, or advice on the tax or accounting treatment of the transaction. If you want any of those, we will scope and price them separately and in writing. We act for you alone in this matter. We have run our conflicts check against the parties you identified; if that list changes, tell me the day it changes, because the check has to be run again and the answer is not always the same.

Our Approach

We work by family rather than by document, because a defect in a chain of title is invisible until you have read every instrument in that family in order. Every date we find goes onto our docket the day we find it, whether or not it is a date we are engaged to keep. That is not a courtesy. It is how this firm avoids the one mistake it cannot absorb. You will have a written status report at the midpoint and the diligence report at the end. Between them, expect short emails against the matter number rather than long ones.

The Team

I am the partner responsible for this engagement and I will sign the report. David Chang, Patent Agent, will take the hardware families and will run the inventor and engineer interviews; he is the one who will keep asking your people the same question until the disclosure is complete, and I would ask you to let him. Richard Henderson, Patent Agent, will take claim and specification analysis and will state the assumption behind every conclusion he reaches. Both work under my supervision. If the composition of the team changes, you will hear it from me in writing before it does.

Fees and Payment

Our fee for the work described above is a fixed fee of $41,000, covering the scope stated in this letter and the report that concludes it. Work begins on March 14, 2025. We bill one third at the outset, one third at the midpoint status report, and the balance on delivery; invoices are due thirty days from issue. Costs we advance on your behalf, such as certified record copies and translation of foreign-family documents, are billed at what they cost us, without markup, and sit outside the fixed fee. If the family count in the proposed grant increases by more than two, or if a chain of title has to be reconstructed from sources outside the record, the fixed fee no longer covers the work; we will agree a supplement in writing before we do it, and not after. If an invoice is more than sixty days past due, we may stop work on notice to you, and we are not responsible for a date that passes while work is stopped.

Term and Termination

The engagement begins on the date given above and ends when we deliver the report and you pay the final invoice. You may terminate at any time, with or without a reason, on written notice. We may terminate on written notice for non-payment, for a conflict that arises and cannot be waived, or if continuing would require us to act contrary to the rules of professional conduct. On termination from either side, you owe us for the work performed to that point, we return your files, and we tell you in writing every docket date then open in the matter. The date does not care why we stopped.

Confidentiality

Everything you give us in this matter, and everything we produce for you in it, is confidential and, where the law allows, privileged. The report will be marked accordingly. Privilege is easier to lose than to establish. If our report or our advice is forwarded to the counterparty, to a prospective investor, or to anyone outside Price-Henson without a common-interest agreement in place, you may waive it, and neither of us can restore it afterward. Ask us before it goes anywhere. Our duty to keep your confidences survives this engagement without limit of time.

Limitation of Liability

Our advice is limited to the documents and facts available to us within the scope and the period of this engagement, and to United States patent law; we do not opine on foreign counterparts except where the report says expressly that we do. Our aggregate liability arising out of this engagement is limited to the fees you have paid under it, and we are not liable for consequential or lost-profit damages. That limit does not apply where the law does not permit it. Nothing in this paragraph limits any liability that cannot be limited as a matter of law or under the rules of professional conduct, and nothing in it limits our obligation to tell you promptly when we have been wrong.

Governing Law

This letter is governed by the law of the state in which this firm maintains its principal office, without regard to its conflict-of-laws rules, and by that state's rules of professional conduct, which control over any provision of this letter that conflicts with them. If a provision is held unenforceable, the rest stands.

If these terms are acceptable, please sign below and return one copy to me. We will not open the file or begin the diligence before the countersigned letter is in hand, so the start date above holds only if it reaches me by then. If you would rather discuss a term first, call me. I would sooner negotiate a clause now than rely on your patience with it later.
