Re: Executive messaging engagement

Dear Jennifer:

This letter sets out the basis on which Ashcombe Advisory Partners LLC ("Ashcombe") will work with Suarez-Jones (the "Company") on the messaging its executive team uses with investors, analysts, employees and the press. It follows our conversations with you over recent weeks, and we have tried to record them faithfully. Where it departs from your understanding, please tell us before you sign, and we will correct it.

The work we will undertake

Our task is to help the Company's senior leadership describe the business, its performance and its priorities in terms that hold steady from one audience to the next. By the close of the engagement, we expect the executive team to have a core narrative, supporting messages for each of its principal audiences, and talking points and question-and-answer material that its spokespeople have rehearsed.

We propose to proceed in three stages. We will first review the Company's recent public statements, investor materials and internal communications, and speak with those members of the leadership team you identify. We will then draft the narrative and its supporting messages for discussion with you and, once these are settled, prepare and rehearse the materials the spokespeople will use.

We will give particular attention to the agreement between what the Company tells investors and what it tells its own employees, since the two are often read side by side. The narrative will be written so that the finance function can stand behind every figure on which it relies.

Each draft will pass through your review before it is shared more widely within the Company, and nothing we prepare will be used externally without the Company's written approval. The engagement does not extend to legal review of disclosures, the preparation of financial information, or the purchase of media. Where a draft touches on a matter that the Company's counsel or auditors should see, we will identify it so that their review can take place first.

Your team at Ashcombe

I will retain overall responsibility for the engagement and will read the principal materials before they reach you. Michael Morris, a Partner of the firm, will lead the work from day to day and will be your first call on timing and priorities.

John Macias, an Associate, will prepare first drafts of the narrative, statements and question-and-answer material. Amy Carter, a Communications Associate, will develop the investor-facing messages and talking points, and will check each claim against the source that supports it.

We understand that you will act as the Company's principal contact for the engagement. Unless you direct otherwise, we will route drafts, questions and requests for approval through you. Should the needs of the work change, we may draw on other members of the firm, and we will tell you before any change is made to the team named here.

How we will work together

We propose to keep you informed through a single email thread for status and approvals, with working sessions whenever a draft is ready for discussion. We will agree the schedule of leadership interviews with you at the outset, and we will ask for the documents we need to review in a single request at the same time, so that your team is not asked for material piece by piece.

Commencement and fee

The engagement will commence on July 5, 2023, and we anticipate that it will run for approximately five months. Should the Company's own calendar call for a different pace, we will agree any change with you in writing.

For the services described in this letter, the Company will pay Ashcombe a fixed professional fee of $102,000. The fee covers the time of the team named above, however many rounds of drafting the agreed scope requires.

Invoicing and payment

We will invoice the fee in equal monthly installments across the term of the engagement, and each invoice is payable within thirty days of receipt. Reasonable out-of-pocket expenses, such as travel to rehearsal sessions, will be billed at cost, and we will ask for your approval before incurring any expense of significance.

Term and termination

This letter takes effect when signed by both parties and continues until the work described above is complete. Either party may end the engagement at any time by written notice to the other. In that event, the Company will pay the portion of the fee attributable to work performed up to the date of notice, together with any approved expenses already incurred.

Confidentiality

We will hold in confidence all non-public information the Company shares with us, use it only for the purposes of this engagement, and disclose it within Ashcombe only to those working on it. Some of that information may be material, and our team will observe the Company's policies on trading and disclosure as they apply to outside advisers. These obligations continue after the engagement ends, and at its close we will return or destroy the Company's documents on request, keeping only such copies as we are required to retain for our own records.

Limitation of liability

Our advice concerns communications and is not legal, accounting or investment advice; the Company retains sole responsibility for the content and accuracy of any statement it makes. To the fullest extent the law permits, Ashcombe's total liability arising from this engagement will not exceed the fees paid to us under this letter, and neither party will be liable to the other for indirect or consequential loss.

Governing law

This letter, and any dispute that arises under it, will be construed under the laws of the state of Ashcombe's organization, without giving effect to principles of conflict of laws. Together with any variation in writing signed on behalf of both parties, it is the complete statement of our agreement on this engagement.

Acceptance

We are glad to be working with you and your colleagues, and we look forward to the first conversations with the leadership team. If these terms reflect your understanding, please sign where indicated below and return a copy to me. Once we have it, Michael will be in touch to arrange the kickoff with your team.
