Re: Pricing Study

Dear Ms. Foley:

This letter confirms the terms on which Pinebrook Advisory Group LLC will carry out a pricing study for Dean PLC. I ask that you read it through before you sign. What you need in order to decide is all here: what we will examine, how we will go about it, who will do the work, what it costs, and when we begin. If any of it reads differently than the conversation we have had, I would rather know now than once we are underway.

A pricing study turns on a plain question that is seldom simple to answer: are you being paid what your work is worth. We will look at how your prices are set today and how they hold once they reach a customer, where discounting and terms quietly wear them down, and what it truly costs to serve one account against another. The work rests on your own records, your billings and your cost figures, not on a general theory of what a firm like yours ought to charge. You will not receive a treatise, but a short, ordered set of pricing changes worth making, each one traced to a figure you can check.

Three of our people will carry the engagement. Robert Miller, our Principal Consultant, holds the work and will be your point of contact; he treats a client relationship as his to look after. Jennifer Fletcher, our Senior Consultant, runs the analysis, and she will not let a number reach your desk before it reconciles. Susan Wiley, our Analyst, builds the underlying work the two of them rely on. I read everything before it leaves this office and stand behind all of it.

Our fee for the study is a fixed fee of $89,500, covering the whole of the work from start through delivery. There are no hourly charges to track and nothing to reconcile at the close. Any out-of-pocket costs would be modest, billed only as incurred and with documentation. We will begin on February 17, 2020 and expect the study to run about eight months from that point.

If this matches your understanding, please sign below and return one copy to me. If it does not, telephone me before you sign; the shape of an engagement is far easier to settle now than in the middle of it. We are glad to have the work, and we mean to give you reason to call on us again.
